

Identify your skills and transition to jobs in demand

Australia's labour market is changing rapidly. Use Skills Match to make your next career move.

It is important you understand the skills and experience you have gained in past jobs can be redirected into new jobs you may not have considered, but are currently in demand.

Skills Match shows how to use existing skills to transfer to new jobs and industries.

Using the results from Skills Match, you can prepare your résumé and have confidence to discuss your skillset with potential employers. For example, discover where you have experience in the skills in demand such as communicating with customers and co-workers, managing information and ideas, working with tools and technology, and specific on-the-job knowledge and know-how.

Skills Match also shows personalised career matches based on work history. You can see key insights for each job, such as average weekly earnings and future demand, and it also shows if there are any skills gaps that can be filled with training.

The results can be customised by training pathway, industry, job type, preferred work style or physical demand to find a path that suits someone's circumstances.

Skills Match tells us that Hospitality workers may have the necessary skills for some of the current jobs in demand such as checkout operators and office cashiers, hospital orderlies, nursing support workers, aged and disabled carers, shelf fillers, commercial cleaners, call or contact centre operators, and truck drivers and couriers.

To find out more, visit www.joboutlook.gov.au or contact joboutlook@dese.gov.au or talk to your Jobfind employment consultant.